ANGEL CARDS

PAULINE DUNNE FINDS OUT WHAT'S IN STORE FOR HER

When I walked into a quiet little pub in Dublin to meet Carol Noonan, a psychic and medium, she was just after doing some meditation to help her focus on my reading. We sat down in a quiet corner and she told me about how her realisation of being a bit different came when her granddad, who had died two weeks previous, came back to her with a message for her mother when she was just a child, and it carried on from there. She also says she is an 'Indigo Adult'. If you haven't heard that term before, it comes from a concept developed in the 1970s by Nancy Ann Tappe. The concept was 'Indigo Children', a pseudoscientific label given to children who are claimed to possess special, unusual and/or supernatural traits or abilities.

We sat down to do the angel card reading, which in my experience is always slightly more vague than tarot cards at the best of times. Carol told me not to tell her too much about myself. The first thing she said to me once I picked out my cards was, "Have you had a dream recently where there was an image where the eyes had been really large? Not really human looking eyes, more like a cartoon character type image with large eyes, very almond shaped?" I hadn't had any dreams like this but she told me to watch out for it (so far, so good - I don't really fancy this kind of dream anytime soon).

She then showed me some things she had written down during her meditation before I got there that she felt were to do with me, these were:

The seventh month, or the seventh of a month is supposed to be important, I have throat problems which come from bottling emotions

(it's all about the chakras ladies), I'm warm, soft, gentle, sensitive and have a big heart. Well, I don't like to blow my own trumpet but if the psychic says it, it must be true! She also wrote down that I was a light worker. I got the wrong end of the stick at first and thought, "Yeah, that's true, I'm not a fan of hard work", but no, I'd got it all wrong. I am in fact a little bit psychic myself, a healer, I'll have you know.

We continued with the reading and according to Carol, I'm going to go from writing about this holistic kind of stuff to actually practising it. I'll be travelling all over the world doing it, to Alaska and all kinds of faraway places. She didn't delve into the romantic side of things too much but apparently I'm going to marry a tall, thin, blonde man (which doesn't give my tall, butch, black haired boyfriend much hope, but how and ever) and we'll have lots of babies. I'll struggle with wanting to get back to work and being a mother at the same time, but it'll all be okay in the end.

We tried some mediumship, but unfortunately Carol wasn't really able to connect with anyone at that time. There was one old man she said was there, with a sheep dog, but this didn't ring any bells. A great, great, great grandfather perhaps? Who knows. All in all it was an interesting experience, and Carol was really nice and engaging. Now I just have to wait and see!
